LOCATION, AREA, SOIL AND CLIMATE. Cumberland county is on the western border of East Tennessee, about midway between Knoxville and Nashville. It was organized in 1856, from portions of White, Putnam, Overton, Fentress, Morgan, most entirely upon the elevated plateau known as the Table Lands of the Cumberland range of mountains, having an elevation of 2,500 feet above tide-water. Its area is about 650 square miles, and its population 3,461, as shown by the recent census, or a fraction over 57 to the square mile. It is bisected from northeast to southwest by a range of high hills, known | tion and improvements. locally as Crab Orchard Mountain, Black Mountain, Walden's Ridge, &c., with inof the Cherokees, has been assassinated. It is rare, indeed, for the mercury to sink below zero, and 90° Fahrenheit may be taken as the maximum during summer. The nights, too, are always cool, enabling one to sleep comfortably under some substantial covering and with entire immunity from nunsquitos. As to healthfulness, refence to the official returns show that for the year ending May 31st, 1870, the mortality for this county was but 23, and of this number three were over 85 years of age, six over 75 years, and one the result lar in its outline, and is estimated to contain about 8,000 acres of land, exclusive of the slopes of the mountain which entirely surround it, rising from 400 to 600 feet above its fruitful bosom. Its present population is about 300, although it is capable of sustaining ten times that number. Several but more frequently there is no percepti- gaps afford comparatively easy access in different directions. The soil is a rich alluvial deposit resting on a subsoil of yellow clay, and annually enriched by the washings from the adjacent mountain slopes, which are very heavily timbered, especially when sloping northward. It produces abundantly and is easily worked. and, as an evidence of its adaptability to the grasses, I need only repeat the statement of a perfectly reliable gentleman now living there, that on a meadow seeded in 1835 and mown annually since, except during the way when it was postured by depth, and I think it may be explained during the war when it was pastured, he cut last season three tons of hay to the acre, without any manurial application whatever. Apple trees planted by the early settlers are still vigorous and productive, and I have the statement well authenticated ant. that single specimens have in a single year produced, by actual measurement, 100 bushels of fruit. Some remarkable specimens of forest trees are also found on the slopes of the mountain. I myself have measured a black walnut which, four feet from the ground, was 15 feet 6 inches in eircumference.

The Cove is abundantly supplied with springs, some of which are in themselves of volume sufficient to run machinery, and these combining form Cove Creek one of the best and most reliable water-powers in the county. A singular feature of this stream is that it runs directly into the mountain, finding an outlet several miles distant in the head of Sequatchie Valley. Cove lands rate from $10 to $20 per acre. with a limited amount offering.

Several enterprising and intelligent Northern families have already located here, who are mostly engaged in agricultural pursuits; and one of them can truthfully boast of one of the finest herds of Devon cattle in the State. Few spots of the same limited area combine greater or more numerous advantages, and the lover of nature would never weary of viewing the many objects of interest, to which my space precludes even an allusion.

HONORABLY ACQUITTEE.

Trial of the Hon. Roderick R. Butfer.

Butler, with his counsel, Messrs. Davidge, Riddel and H. H. Miller, entered and took seats The mineral resources are almost wholly undeveloped. Iron ore and excellent bituminous coal are found in abundance, was ready to proceed, and received an affirmative answer. Judge Fisher, in a brief address, recited what they expected to prove, and was free to confess that the lovernment would rather fail honestly than that the accused should be convicted if he was not guilty, and would be a great deal better pleased if Mr. Butler established his innocence. Mr. Davidge, for the defense, said they would admit all the prosecution claimed, but would prove that all that Mr. Butler did was by authority, both verbally and written. the second, against Mr. Butler, the Government had not a shadow of a case; he had examined the witnesses, and was satisfied that Mrs. Madden had also authorized Mr. Butler to use her name for all purposes, and further, that she had received every dollar from Mr. Butler that she was entitled to. Judge Wylie so ordered, and in dismissing the case, said that while he did not blame the District Attorney or the grand jury who found the bills against Mr. Butler, there was a great fault in the Government officials that dictated and furthered the prosecution, and that they ought not to believe the statements of a single woman as in that case.

He thought that the public interests were not subserved, and did not think any serious damage was done to the reputation of Mr. Butler by such a prosecution as this, as there was no case at all, either in law or equity, against him, and for a single dollar the Government officials might have the Government officials might have known the fact, as the attesting witnesses could have as well been interrogated by letter as to have had this failure to injure
